Title: Shortage of graduates in fast-growing fields could threaten Sacramento's growth

Publication Date: January 25, 2018

Summary: The Sacramento region has had significant job growth over the last decade, but the regional economy could plateau if local colleges and universities don't supply more graduates with the right degrees.

Josh Freilich, chief nursing executive at Dignity Health's Mercy Hospital of Folsom, said Dignity has partnered with area community colleges—including American River College, Sacramento City College and Sierra College—to develop an accelerated nursing program.
